and would not let anyone else touch. One could not stop which he sharpened every evening in the barn after supper.
Before they went into the barn, they set six or eight little chips on a door, near the entrance, for them to stop by.
They always stood by the door when they entered, as though they were holding up the door for them to enter.

I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.

I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.

I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.
I always went out to watch when they were coming.
They had to walk, because there was no other way.