American brown hair in his classroom on the last day of school. He always knew the children and was popular among them. His friends were the children from his home, and he often played with them during recess.

There were children who lived across the street, and they used to come and play with the other children who lived nearby. They would often gather around the school and spend hours playing games and talking to each other.

One day, a group of children decided to play a game of hide-and-seek. They ran around the school, looking for a place to hide. Suddenly, they came across a small, empty room that they had never noticed before. It was dark and musty, but it seemed perfect for their game.

The children hid in the room and waited for their friends to find them. They were all excited and felt like they had found the perfect hiding spot. But little did they know, their adventure was about to take a surprising turn.

As they were playing, they heard a faint, eerie sound coming from the room. It was a whispering voice that seemed to be calling out to them. The children were terrified and quickly ran out of the room, never to return again.

From that day on, the room became known as the 'spooky room' and was avoided by everyone. But the children never forgot the thrill and adventure they had experienced on that fateful day.
