thoughts.

They do not know the place of another and we shall never see them again.

I see the mountains in the distance and I see the mountains of Japan.

Their children are seen everywhere.

It is a group of Japanese boys in the fields and in the parks.

We speak of them every now and then.

Their faces are known to us.

But when we talk of them, we think of Japan.

They are seen everywhere.

Our children, our friends, our neighbors.

We do not know their faces.
